Main points of what?

trying an action of uncertain value vs reverting back to a known action of known value

Exploration - exploring the environment looking for new rewards

Vigilance and exploration are different cognitive mechanisms

Exploitation using known information to get rewards

Newtown has good food

Exploitation is using known information to get rewards

EatClub rocks

Attention

Exploitation may increase over the lifespan relative to exploration - as a child you don't know anything, so need to explore.

Exploitation is doing the same thing repeatedly due to familiarity and known reward whereas exploitation is trying something new at a risk of no reward exploitation keeps us locked in habits that we have associated with reward in the past, exploration opens us to the possibility of new but potentially higher reward experiences

Mind-wandering can be modeled by an exploitation-exploration system rather than with attention spans!

Vigilance is more about threats too much of exploration or exploitation is not good

Not all who mind-wander are lost

We need to balance drives for exploitation and exploration in order to maximise reward. Too much of one thing may be good for society, but bad for the individual.

all of our decisions are a trade-off of exploitation vs exploration, which we select by predicting which will provide the highest expected value exploitation is the habitually do the same thing as you know it has certain reward whereas exploration is being exploratory and possibly wasting resources for a reward that isn't as good or valueable

The exploration strategy search for better options, and it can come from mind-wandering.

We need both exploitation and exploration both within and among people to allow us to both keep engaging in rewarding activities but also find new and more suitable/more rewarding behaviours.

Exploitation means we are more likely to perform habits instead of try new things

wat

Balance is needed between exploration and exploitation to meet drives the exploit/explore dilemma is a problem of choosing between a familiar something that has previously been rewarding and a new unknown option that may or may not be better than the familiar option mmyes gambling Known reward (mmyumny thai place) or unknown outcome (hmmm new place mmmm?)

Exploitation

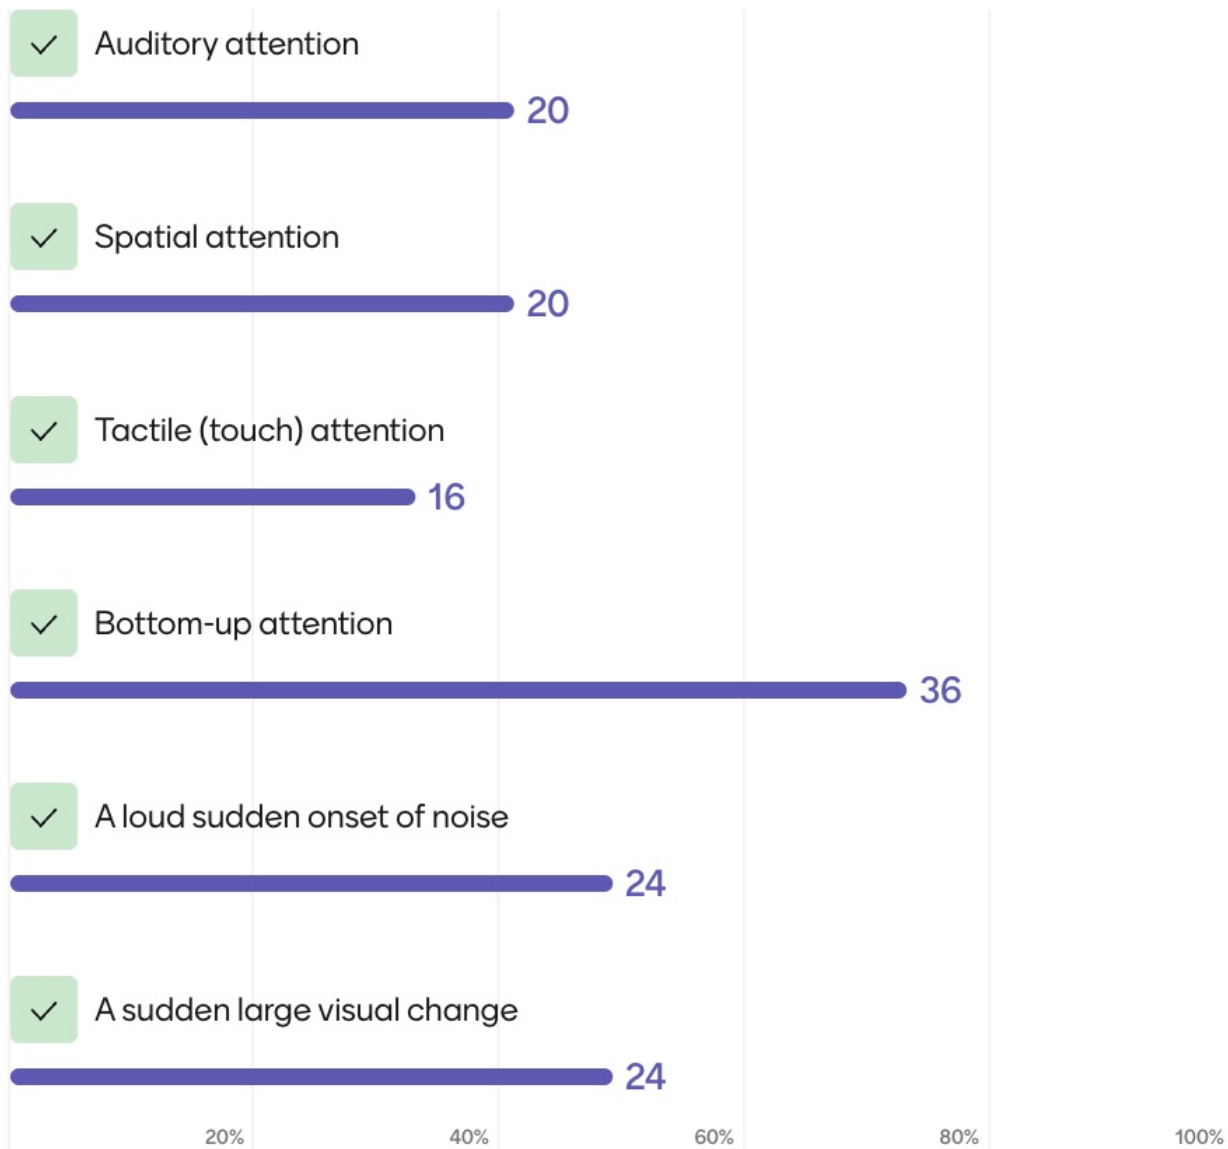

idk

Exploitation = habit Exploration = trying new things

Why vigilance supports exploration - is it because we need to explore/notice our environment in order to stay vigilant and be safe?
